

Publications

In addition to articles, you can create content items known as publications. Publications are time-sensitive collections of articles. They do not contain independent body text. Instead, the articles that you add to the publication display on your Web site. For example, you want to publish daily devotions on your Web site. Instead of publishing a new piece of content on your Web site each day, you can create articles that contain the daily devotions and add the articles to the publication. Each day, Extend removes the previous day's devotion from your Web site and displays the current devotion.

When you create publications, you must select how frequently you want Extend to rotate the articles. You can select from the following default frequencies:

- Daily
- Weekly
- Biweekly
- Monthly

If necessary, you can set custom release dates for each article in the publication.
